DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The tomb and monument are designed in a type common to the period. The Grant Monument in Lincoln Park in Chicago is quite similar in structure. The 96-foot Douglas Tomb State Memorial consists of a granite base surmounted by a 46-foot column supporting a bronze figure of Douglas nine feet nine inches high, standing in repose with scroll in his left hand and placed against his hip, his right hand thrust under the lapel of his tightly buttoned coat as he looks eastward over take Michigan.

The four pedestals of the base (which contain the tomb) are occupied by Illinois, History, Justice, and Eloquence, in sitting attitude. Then Fortune has her hand placed on the State Coat of Arms with ears of corn in the left hand and crowned with a chaplet of wheat, supposedly in the act of relating the story of the State to History on the opposite corner, who with a stylus in hand is about to record it upon the scroll lying across her lap. Her left foot rests upon a pile of tablets. Justice rests her right hand upon a sheathed sword and holds plans in her left hand. Eloquence points with her right hand toward the statue of Douglas, while the left hand rests upon a lyre instrument.

There are four bas-reliefs in the panels of the main base representing the advance of American civilization.

Douglas' body is in a sarcophagus of Vermont Marble from his home county. It supports a bust of him by Leonard Volk. Originally the base and sepulchre were made of Joliet "Athens Marble" (a local, high-quality limestone). Now only the door sill is of that material. All of the exposed material was changed to granite in 1877.

The marble sarcophagus containing the remains of one of Illinois' most gifted son, bear the following inscription: "Stephen A. Douglas / Born / April 23, 1813 / Died / June 3, 1861 / 'Tell my children to obey the laws and uphold the Constitution."

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Stephen Armold Douglas came to Illinois at the age of twenty in 1833. While teaching school he passed his bar exam, entered politics, and rose to be the national leader of his party. He held various State offices until his election to the United States Senate in 1847, where he served until his death in June, 1861.

Douglas was the first statesman from Illinois to gain national prominence. In this role he is chiefly noted for his leadership in the issue over the Kansas-Nebraska Act (which he drafted), the promotion of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates of 1858 which played a large part in Lincoln's electoral victory over Douglas for the Presidency in 1860 and a milestone on the road to the Civil War.

Douglas' fame as a rational figure is well-established, but he was also important to Illinois and Chicago. In 1849 he purchased 53 acres on what was then the southern boundary of the city. This was to be his estate. He named it "Oakenwald". He is buried in the southeast portion of that estate.

The whole area surrounding the Douglas Tomb is touched with the lasting influence of Douglas. In 1856 the first University of Chicago opened on ten acres of land given by Douglas from the western portion of his property. On an adjoining piece of land the government built Camp Douglas, the second largest training base and prison camp in the Civil War. The eastern edge of the Douglas Tomb State Memorial is the Illinois Central right-of-way which exists because of Douglas' efforts. The Tomb itself is built on the spot Douglas intended for his home. Even today, parks and streets in the area named for him and a neighborhood school called Oakenwald are reminders of Pouglas' presence. The tomb is the keystone in the arch between Douglas' national life and his place in Chicago history. There is no other monument for Douglas.

Immediately after his death an association of notable Chicagoans was formed to undertake the construction of a suitable tomb and monument. Fund-raising by private subscription and sales of momentos were a failure so in 1865 the State purchased the tomb-site from Douglas' widow for $25,000. It has been owned by the state ever since. On June 3, 1868, Douglas' body was placed in the completed portion of the tomb. Leonard Volk, an established sculptor and relative of Douglas, designed the tomb and monument. In 1871 the Chicago Fire destroyed Volk's plans for the uncompleted structure. New appropriations totaling $59,000 were made by 1879. Records show that $300 of this went to John M. Van Osdel for "professional services". The tomb was completed in

May 1881, after an expense of $90,000. Window Lett Today the Douglas Tomb State Memorial with its gardens are operated by the Division of Parks and Memorials of the Illinois Department of Conservation. It is open free to the public everyday except Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Years.
